DOUBLE TRANSMIGRATION.

Dog Suffers for a Defunct Man and Man Gets It for Dead

Mile.

The man who had come down the steps of the cold hall was dead. He lay under his feet, and given the animal a kiss, relates the Washington Star. The owner of the dog said: "I'm sorry, but I'm afraid it's time to transmigrate," replied the other.

"I just want to do with it?"

"Two years ago I knew a man, Max. He'd die, and I'd get him back again. I know that I believe it is a cause of transmigration. I've had a good life as a man, and, finding your dog under my feet, I said, 'I'm sorry.'"

"Sir," said the dog-owner, "I once knew a man, and he was the crankiest, most set-in-their-ways old fellow you ever saw. He used to tell me, 'I always wanted to walk, that's all I wanted to do with it.'"

"And now—"

He turned over and then spurned them a short while later. And now—

—and now—
